The engines would not recede. An awful collimon ensued, by which both engines were almost stove to pieces. The Engineers, themselves, and the Mail Agents, when they saw that the meeting was inevitable, jumped overboard and escaped in jury. There were a large number of passengers on both trains, and it is really miraculous that they were not seriously injured. The up-going Engine, the Henry Clay, one of the most powerful ewned-by the Company, broke the down coming one, the New Hanover, almost into pieces. The names of these reckless men, who thus risked the lives of their fellow-beings, are, John Britt, who had charge of the Henry Clay, and Thomas Surloe, who conducted the New Manover. No excuse can be pleaded in palliation of this reckless conducts These fool hardy men saw each other for miles, and it is no good excuse to say that they far as the scanty limits of our columns will thought they could back their Engines. On Tuesday night last, about 9 o'clock, an attempt was made to fire Mr. Z. Latimer's Dry Goods Store, on Market street. The daring perpetrator poured the contents of a phial of Spirits of Turpentine under the back door, and then ignited the combustible fluid with a lucifer match. The phial and the match were found at the spot, and the door was charred. Luckily the attempt failed.
